Investment Adviser's Market Commentary

News that Iran and the U.S. were working towards a ceasefire saw energy prices tumble back towards levels seen before the conflict.

In UK politics, Andy Burnham's by-election win sparked talks of a change in Labour Party leadership. While some worry this could lead to higher government spending, the reality is that whoever is in charge will face very tight budgets, limiting how much policy can actually change.

In the stock market, companies linked to artificial intelligence had been the big winners throughout May, but June saw a rotation into more traditional areas like healthcare and banking stocks, which pushed the Dow Jones index to a new all-time high. Meanwhile, Google's parent company Alphabet raised $85 billion by selling new shares and Elon Musk’s SpaceX debuted on the NASDAQ stock exchange with much fanfare.

The American economy continues to perform strongly, with the U.S. jobs report showing a robust job growth, at 172,000 new jobs added in May, which has put pressure on the Federal Reserve to raise interest rates given the already above target inflation.

Central banks took different approaches. In Europe, the European Central Bank raised interest rates for the first time in response to the energy-driven rise in prices, signalling that further increases are likely. In the United States, the Federal Reserve kept rates unchanged but made clear it remains focused on bringing inflation down. The new Fed chairman, Kevin Warsh, struck a tougher tone than many expected. In the UK, the Bank of England also held rates steady, watching to see whether higher energy costs feed through into wages and everyday prices
