In May, global trade tensions caused by Trump's tariff rollout started to ease. A month on from "Liberation Day", the US announced its first post-tariff trade deal with the UK. Talks with other countries, especially China, also took a calmer turn. Tariffs introduced in April were rolled back, and stock markets responded positively, regaining all losses from early April.

Late in the month, the United States Court of International Trade ruled that President Trump overstepped his authority to use emergency powers when imposing April's tariffs. The White House appealed the decision, and we're yet to see how the judgement might impact Trump's influence on trade policy going forward.

Despite the tariff policy uncertainty, company earnings in May held up better than many anticipated. This supported a recovery in share prices. Even so, we expect policy shifts to continue. For this reason, we maintain a neutral weighting to stocks in our portfolios.

The impact of the trade war was also felt in bond markets. In Japan, the central bank reduced its government bond purchases in May. This caused prices to fall and had a ripple effect on global bond markets. In response, many governments chose to issue shorter-term debt to reduce the risk of rising interest costs. This echoes our own approach, as we continue to focus on bonds with lower interest rate sensitivity.

Fund In Focus

Pictet Water

A concentrated global equity fund focused on companies offering solutions to global water challenges.

Urbanization, population growth and climate change are placing growing pressure on global water resources. This fund seeks out companies aiming to address this challenge through water supply, treatment and distribution, wastewater treatment and water quality monitoring.

When assessed against the planetary boundaries framework, the fund manager's analysis finds that companies within the fund have a positive impact on freshwater use, eutrophication and chemical pollution.
