Investment Adviser's Market Commentary

Chris Ainscough

Global markets navigated a complex mix of macro uncertainty and shifting policy expectations in November 2025, producing muted gains in equities, modest support for bonds and sharp moves in commodities. Equity markets were volatile but ended the month slightly higher. The S&P 500 eked out a 0.2% gain after a late rally driven by dovish signals from the Federal Reserve, which markets now see as almost certain to cut rates in December.

Earlier in the month, US stocks suffered a 5% drawdown amid concerns over AI-related valuations and the prolonged government shutdown, which delayed key economic data releases. Sector rotation was evident: defensive areas such as healthcare outperformed, while technology lagged as investors reassessed lofty expectations for mega-cap names. European equities posted modest gains, supported by fiscal stimulus in Germany and hopes of geopolitical de-escalation, while emerging markets underperformed on tech weakness and soft commodity-linked revenues.

Bond markets were broadly stable. US Treasury yields fell as weaker labour data and cooling inflation reinforced expectations of policy easing. Credit spreads tightened slightly, benefiting investment-grade and high-yield segments, while European sovereigns saw limited movement as the ECB held rates steady but hinted at potential cuts in early 2026. The backdrop of uneven global growth and fiscal concerns kept duration-sensitive assets in focus, with long-dated bonds outperforming on rate-cut bets.

Commodities delivered the most pronounced moves. Gold surged more than 5% to trade above $4,150 per ounce, marking a fresh record high and extending its year-to-date gain to nearly 57%, as safe-haven flows intensified amid policy uncertainty and central-bank buying. Oil prices, by contrast, remained under pressure from a persistent supply glut and bearish Opec forecasts, with Brent crude futures settling near $62 and WTI around $58, despite geopolitical risks.

Fund In Focus

JP Morgan Emerging Markets aims to deliver long-term capital growth through a high-conviction portfolio of leading companies across the emerging markets region. The strategy is bottom-up and index-agnostic, focusing on quality businesses with sustainable growth drivers. Technology and financials dominate the portfolio, with core positions in Taiwan Semiconductor and Tencent reflecting confidence in structural trends such as digitalisation and rising consumer wealth. Exposure to Latin America via MercadoLibre and Nu Holdings adds diversification, while selective additions in India and Korea highlight the team's active approach to capturing regional opportunities. The fund has delivered strong returns in 2025, outperforming the MSCI Emerging Markets index, and with its disciplined focus on fundamentals and experienced management team, it remains well-positioned to harness long-term growth across developing economies.
