Portfolio Managers Market Commentary

October carried forward the cautious optimism that began in September, as global equity markets delivered another month of gains. Easing inflation pressures, ongoing central bank support, and a broadly positive corporate earnings season helped lift sentiment, even as geopolitical tensions and political uncertainty kept volatility elevated.

U.S. equities led global performance, with the technology-heavy Nasdaq gaining 7.3% in GBP. Strong earnings from the "Magnificent Seven" mega-cap names boosted confidence in the resilience of U.S. growth stocks. The broader S&P 500 also advanced, supported by financials and renewed expectations for lower interest rates following another 0.25% rate cut from the Federal Reserve.

Across Asia and Emerging Markets, momentum remained strong. The MSCI Asia ex Japan and Emerging Market indices rose 6.3% and 6.7% respectively, led by India and broader Emerging Asia. A weaker dollar and improving trade sentiment supported returns, while Japan's Nikkei reached a record high as optimism around fiscal reform and corporate governance increased.

European equities gained modestly, with strength in autos and luxury goods helping offset softness in Germany's industrial sector. While in the UK, large-cap stocks outperformed, supported by defensive and energy names, while mid-caps lagged due to ongoing inflation and domestic growth concerns.

Bond markets delivered broadly positive returns, helped by stabilising inflation and greater clarity on interest rate paths. UK gilts were a standout, gaining nearly 3% as inflation undershot expectations. Corporate bonds delivered positive returns, supported by resilient earnings and tightening credit spreads, though performance was somewhat softer than that of sovereign debt.

Real assets added diversification benefits, with listed infrastructure and property regaining ground as yields moderated. Gold also strengthened, benefiting from lower real yields and steady investor demand.

Overall, October offered a constructive backdrop, as easing inflation and improving confidence supported balanced portfolio returns.

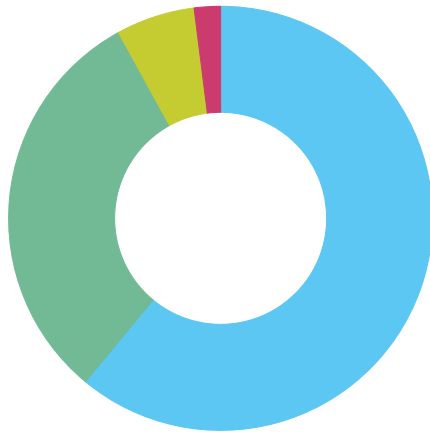

Looking ahead, inflation remains risk, while trade policy uncertainty will continue to weigh on businesses, as tariffs introduced earlier in the year gradually feed through supply chains. Undoubtedly, this will lead central banks to remain cautious in their policy approach. With portfolios, this environment leads us to continue to focus on diversification across geographies and asset classes, with emphasis on opportunity-driven equity exposure, selective credit, and risk-aware allocations to real assets.

Against this backdrop, portfolios delivered positive returns, led by strong gains in equities. Overweight allocations to emerging markets and Asia Pacific ex Japan drove performance, with the HSBC MSCI Emerging Markets Equity Index up 6.7% and the abrdn Asia Pacific ex Japan Equity Tracker gaining 6.1%. Japanese equities also performed well, rising 5.3%, while U.S. exposure benefited from technology strength, with the HSBC American Index up 4.9%. UK and European equities added 3.7% and 3.8% respectively. Real assets contributed modestly, while fixed income positions posted steady gains, led by UK gilts, where the Vanguard UK Government Bond Index rose 2.7%.
